THE DRY WAVE

Local option elections held in Missouri since the first of the year indicate that the state is experiencing a "dry" wave that slowly but surely is driving the saloons from Missouri. Even the "wets" admit that the prohibition movement is making wonderful gains in Missouri.

Since January 1 six local option fights have been decided, two in cities and four in counties. The "drys" won all six fights, and three of those counties had been wet ever since Missouri was a state. A wet and dry may show that the "oasis" are getting fewer and farther between.

The first liquor election held this year was in Neosho January 6. That city voted out its saloons four years ago by a majority of 56. The "wets" made another fight this year, but the "dry" majority was increased to 134.

Eldorado Springs, in Cedar county, had the next local option fight. It went "wet" five years ago by 34. At the election January 26, the drys won by 314.

But it has been in the county elections that the drys have made the biggest gains. Phelps county, which went wet four years ago by 359, went dry at an election January 11 by 340.

Clinton county, already dry, voted dry again in February, increasing the dry majority from 266 to 1,057.

The biggest surprise was Monroe county, which has always had saloons. In 1908 the wets won by 41 votes, but at an election March 15, it went dry by 250 votes, and the saloons are gone from Monroe—the banner democratic county of Missouri.

The biggest reversal of sentiment was shown in Crawford county. Several years ago at a local option election the county went wet by 728 votes. But it voted again last month.

The drys won by 565, a change of more than a thousand votes, in the last two years forty local options elections have been held the drys winning thirty-six and the wets only four.

All of those elections were before the passage of the county unit bill, a near-prohibition measure. The passing of that bill has accentuated the "wet" and "dry" fight in Missouri. It has made the liquor issue a foremost one out in country Missouri. Practically every county that now is wet or close will have elections within the next two years. There will be a local option fight in some county nearly every month.

Under the old law, the counties voted as a unit, excluding all cities of more than 2,500 population. The new law requires every county to vote as a unit, regardless of the population or any of its cities. The "drys" predict that Springfield and Joplin, and other large cities, voting under the new law, will now go dry.—K. C. Star.

TRY TO DODGE UNIT LAW

Nevada, Mo., April 14.—An interesting wet and dry situation is rapidly developing in Nevada and Vernon counties. Four years ago the county outside Nevada were nearly 1,000 dry, but the city went wet by 159.

Since that time there have been saloons only in Nevada. To forestall the county unit law, under which it is figured both county and city would go dry, the wets have gotten up a petition to the county court asking for another local option election in the county outside the city, believing that will prevent the holding of a unit election for four years. The court today granted the petition and set the date of the election for May 13.

In retaliation, the drys declare they will petition the court for an immediate local option election in the city and claim they will make the city and county a desert before it would have been done had not the saloons undertaken to dodge the unit law.

McGUIRE'S SNAKE STORY.

John McGuire, who was in Boone county last year, and we failed to get his annual snake story, was in town last week with a brand new one, for which he has a living witness, although it dates back to the time when John hunted deer in this county. John and the living witness, whose name we have forgotten were hunting deer in the vicinity line of Saline and Johnson counties, when they discovered a tree growing on the top of a solid flat rock, its roots extending over the edges of the huge stone and finding their way to the soil. While they were looking at the tree and wondering how it ever grew in that manner, they discovered a large rattlesnake lying at the foot of the tree on the rock. An instant later the entire top of the rock seemed to be a seething mass of little reptiles and the big snake opened her mouth and they all ran inside of her. They fired a load of buck shot into the big snake, cut her open and killed her. She had swallowed and some of them got away.—Slater Roster.

Must Return Mail

The postal authorities at Washington, recognizing the fact that postmasters are liable to mistakes in getting letters and mail in the wrong boxes, have fixed a penalty of $200 on persons taking mail out of their boxes addressed to other parties and not returning same at once. This law includes all mails going through post-offices. The excuse that it is the postmaster's fault does not go with Uncle Sam. If you have been getting mail that belongs to some one else, the best thing you can do is to return it to the postmaster at once.
